

a) The location of resources can affect employment for many groups is because of the need, access to services. Resources located in suburban, edge cities are generally placed there because of the population. The more populated area the more business and income. Employment is not hard to find in populated locations, whereas in rural areas, employment is scarce. There is not many resources located in rural areas due to the smaller population. The main employment is agriculture, and this form of employment is determined by the nature. If more resources ~~go~~ were put in rural locations, un-employment in those areas would plummet. Keeping in mind that if resources were moved out of locations such as the city or rural areas ~~this~~ there would be arise in unemployment. The location of resources can very well affect employment.

b) The "Aged" has the characteristics of individuals who are sixty five years or older and those individuals who have ceased full-time employment. There are many definitions by which people would categorise the 'aged' into. The 'Aged' have many needs that must be met to ensure the well-being of the individual. Three very important needs that will be furthered discussed due to their significance is health, financial support and sense of identity. Health of the aged is very important as the individuals need to maintain their ~~health~~ health, so their physically needs can be met to ensure their well-being. Their health is also important because they need to feel active, ~~because~~ Their bodies are getting older and so to their minds. The 'Aged' have to remain positive in their thoughts and their actions to keep up the standards of living. Financial support is also important as people of every age need economic support. Financial support is significant to the 'Aged' as they generally do not have a salary income coming into the home. It is used for adequate housing, adequate clothing and food. If the individuals are financially safe, the well-being of the 'aged' will be positive. The most important and significant need of the 'aged' is sense of identity.

Independence is important as it determines how the individual feels about themselves. A sense of identity is important to the 'aged' because they need to feel loved and wanted. They need to be able to feel they are useful. This will give them a positive self-concept of themselves. The aged are the same as any other individual except for they have more knowledge and experience and are good to have in communities.

c) Equality is important in ~~determining~~ the Australian society and there are many management strategies in which the government addresses these equity issues.

The 'Aged' and the 'homeless' have a lot of stereotyping and disadvantages in society. 'Aged' people are portrayed as 'too old' and it can be disheartening for some individuals that find themselves in the category of 'the aged', to have this disadvantage passed to them. 'Homeless' people on the other hand are known to be of society's poorest. ~~These~~ This group of individuals do not live with adequate housing, food and sometimes clothing. They are disadvantaged in society as they may lack in skills and education which they may need for employment. The 'Aged' and the 'homeless' have one thing in common, they have the same rights as any other individual under the Australian constitution. Management strategies used to address equity issues is laws have been put into place so that no individual can be discriminated against. Government has Government funding agencies such as SAAP (The Supported Accommodation Assistance Program) and CAP (Crisis Accommodation Program) for homeless people to access to help, ^{and housing} Centrelink is available for both the 'aged' and the 'homeless'. The 'aged' ~~can~~ also ^{has} ~~can be~~ government organisations such as ACATs which helps those who fit under the 'aged' category who need access to services and whose needs are not being met physically, socially and psychologically. The Government also has benefits for the 'aged' such as pensions to assist in necessities and for both groups counselling is accessible.
