

a- In the past decade the workplace has responded to the growing number of dual working families.

Even the N.S.W Government see the change 'Families First'

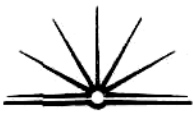

This is trying to send the idea that the workforce accepts employees with families. many regulations have been design to assist families.

Child care centres are available at certian work station, flexiable work hours are available, part-time, casual and working from home.

The Work-force also see the stress and responsibilities demands on parents.

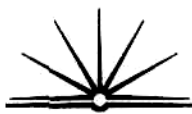

Now both male and females can get pertunaty leave.

Families are also giving 1 day a year off for any particular family reason/ or problem. Back to the dual working families they can see that women are taken part in the paid workforce, with both parents taking on the mother/housewife role. The work place also allows parents to bring their children into work on occasion, giving more time for bonding, family interaction.

↳ The impact on social, legal, technological change have ~~also~~ had on current trends in patterns of work are the rise of women in the workforce, dual working families, this can be seen as parttime work - leaving time for children. Technology also has a major change in patterns of work. With the advancement in technology less people are need, with faster productivity. One man control 10 machine, reduction in a manual labour, social trends are changing dramatically, people with families, knowledge and experience needed, people travel can all determine the social trend in work patterns

Within every company there are always rule, regulation and legislation to be followed, this too can result in work patterns.

With the different work patterns available to individuals there is one out there for everyone, full time, part time, casual, seasonal, job sharing, voluntary etc will suit someone's needs

Everything everyday impacts on society ~~the~~ especially the workforce, people only work to receive money to spend for their own satisfaction to compensate for their slavery to society. People may only need to work a certian pattern of work to satisfy their needs, ~~socially~~, socially, legdly, and tehnologically.
