Human impacts are affecting the nature and rate of change of ecosystems at risk. For example The Entrance NSW. We make fishing laws to protect our sea life for many different reasons, If all the fish are killed off birds won't stay, there will no longer be the recreational sport of fishing. People are greedy, if you catch a fish that is under the appropriate weight throw it back, its what the law tells you to do. This is a very important ecosystem and it should not be destroyed. Rainforests are also very important they need to be well maintained when people walk through them they should not be touched or tormented, some of the trees and plants in a rain forest are hundreds of years old and people walk through and say oh this is pretty and tear the plant in half

Humans are destroying everything with natural beauty on this earth. They need to care a little more.
