

World cities are those cities around the world with global significances; thus meaning they have roles to play within the operation of global network.

World cities are those such as New York, Tokyo, and London which are the three most significant leading world cities. This is because they are leaders in banking and finance, in trade, in communication, well established transport systems, developed housing and health care systems, have large TNC's, all world cities are positioned in the developed world; this is due to the infrastructure and economic stability these countries have developed.

World cities have all of the world's large TNCs, they trade from country to country, though those best off such as New York are able to buy ~~more~~ cheaper from countries such as ~~these~~ ^{these in the developing world.} This allows New York to grow bigger. These countries supply to other world cities and to primate cities, who supply to smaller cities.

These cities have developed large transport systems, buses, train, aeroplanes, trams, taxis, etc, to maximise the economy within the country the money from Sydney taxes goes ~~a~~ partly to the government which goes towards, roads and helping issues in our cities; such as crime, poverty, homelessness, joblessness.

Where countries in the developing world don't have enough money for transport. Government don't have enough money to get rid of most of their problems, if any.

They are leaders in communication. Meaning that most people have phones, fax machines, internet, and other means of how they can talk to people across the other side of the world, almost instantly.

They have established good sewerage systems to stop disease, and keeps their fresh water clean. They have proper housing without slums and government funds house the poor.

They have plenty of jobs to support the population they may have problems though the government helps with funding compensation, ~~part~~ joblessness for short periods,

maternity leave.

These countries have strict education systems, where education
is free for most of your life.

These cities attract migrants from rural areas and also developing countries though ~~these~~ these cities have policies on who they let stay and who can just tour.

World cities play roles in the interaction of global networks.
