Belief systems.

(a). The belief in the practices of Hindus and belief in their deity, the Brahman began in India in approximately 5400 BC. Their deity, through the practice of meditation, pray and good karma did he achieve nirvana and even the path to free himself from mora (a life freed from reincarnation). The Hindus believe the to follow the path in purity which will also lead them to attain ultimate mora, the purpose/direction to be achieved. Hindu mythology is based upon the events which took place BC such as the events which encourage the celebration or the Maha Kumbha Mela.

(b). Globalisation is the emergence of a "global village" through the adoption of sophisticated information systems, transnational corporations (TNC's) and communication. Globalisation can possibly extend national borders and impact upon countries and inevitably their belief system. For example, the process of globalisation expanded into India which contains 85% of Hindu followers have presented an issue that Hindus are introduced to different worldviews and ideologies that exist that differ from their own (what they get from Hinduism).
In the past and even today, Hinduism presents women to an interior to men, and although so do other religious belief systems, they do not oppress women the way in which some Hindu women feel. The Arya Samaj movement is a result of this impact of globalization on Hinduism. As Hindu women began to challenge the norms within a belief system, they challenge the norms by carrying new concepts that may should be changed so that it becomes a norm rather than it being ignored. Though globalization and the idea of institutions such as education, both women and men, raised the idea of Hinduism adapting to the new worldview that women should have a say just as men do.

However, the as a result and response to the threat of globalization, many Hindus have taken on a fundamentalist approach, resisting the “threat” of globalization. One such group is the BJP political party, which intact practiced globalization so have such an impact on their belief systems by mandatory their traditions and their traditional roles of men.
