Aboriginals are well famous for their traditions and story telling that has been passed down from one generation to another.

A benefit of this is that even though their society and traditions around them have constantly changed they continue to keep their own alive.

It is well known that their "dream" time stories are not only stories but also provide discipline for the next generation.

By keeping their beliefs alive even though their surroundings has changed they have been able to continue their beliefs and spread it to other cultures.
