A group in Australian society which have benefited from a continuity in society are official Australian citizens, typically white Australians. They have benefited from the continuities of our democratic governmental & political system. Australian society considers itself egalitarian & affords all Australian citizens the right to vote & participate in political processes & elections on a local, state & national level. This is highly beneficial as it allows people freedom to express their political opinion without fear of retribution or danger, & thus ensures they have the ability to accept or reject possible changes that could occur in their macro world - particularly in terms of the economy, foreign policy & environmental issues. It is a continuous element of the Australian constitution & law & ensure that Australian citizens are fairly & equally represented, benefiting them extensively.
