Question 1

b) Because if you should choose in this matter those who would profit from a conviction, if you should remain seated, with the result that you should condemn his child, from whose goods came from, beware, for by the immortal gods, gentlemen of the jury, a newer and even more cruel form of proscription would seem to be condoned. For that first proscription, which had been against those who were able to bear arms, was for the fact of it however not approved by the senate, not without reason, as being suspected as being much more than what it was, who seem to advise the state of the facts, for this in truth, they seek the children and even those babies still in their cribs, for are you not gentlemen from the jury chosen from that same body which I named earlier, for by the immortal gods, than in this place where matters of public come.
