

Start here.

(A) This was <sup>true</sup> true: if that (ille) pirate had ~~been~~ been beheaded once, you would not have ~~had~~ <received> money; if this false pirate had died or had fled, it would not have been difficult to replace him, in place of another.
I have said more than I wanted about that pirate chief and however I have <sup>in my argument</sup> overblown that which is most certain about this charge.

(b) I shall show that that Gavius, whom ~~you said~~ ~~were saying to be~~ you <sup>say</sup> ~~said~~ to have suddenly become a spy, has been thrown by you into the stone quarries at Syracuse, and I shall show not only from the written records of the Syracusians, lest you say to me <sup>that</sup> that there is some Gavius in the written records, ~~and~~ I am inventing and choosing this name, so that you are able to say that name here, but I shall produce witnesses for your judgement who will say that that man <sup>himself</sup> was thrown into the stone quarries at Syracuse by you.

Additional writing space on back page.